CHAOTIC EUROPEAN SITUATION STABALIZES!!!

As the war moved into the spring of 1902, patterns of alliances begin to develop. The Great Powers are beginning to settle in to their natural alliances and interests. For awhile it seemed as if the situation would become chaotic, and in fact some of the opening moves seemed absolutely preposterous. But as Gamesmogul, we are glad to see that all the Powers are adopting an intelligent course of realistic expansion.

After having no games completed for the last five issues, we are happy to report a completion. 1904 K has just ended. Congratulations to Elihu Pafnir (Switzerland) who won by default upon the death of the last surviving player in the Jollie Ollie Nursing Home at the age of ninety-three. Congrats, Elihu, on your first postal win!

An Editorial

As the Saturday Evening Post embodied all the sentiments of brutal capitalism, economic exploitation, cultural trivia, fancies of the American Dream that never were, and in short all those sentiments that assured me a happy and secure childhood, which sentiments I can now safely dispise having become a mature adult. We will refuse all monies whatsoever bearing the image and likeness of Benjamin Franklin. Any person attempting to pay debts to us with such monies will have it summarily returned unspent and their debt cancelled! So there!!

It's quiz time again! Everybody's doing it now, so we decided why not us? So here is a little quiz over general knowledge. There have been complaints in other magazines that the quizzes have been too specialized, so we have tried to cover all fields. Five prizes will be awarded. They are listed below.

1. An autographed tapestry of the Last Supper.
2. A two year cruise aboard the beautiful USS Enterprise.
3. A handbound piglatin translation of the Junction by Alexander Pope.
4. Five lbs. of genuine Socrates Aristotle Crassis navel lint.
5. Tiny Tim.
